

OUR LADY OF RANSOM

4th October 2026 Twenty-Seventh Sunday of the Year (A)

Psalter Week 3

Ron is a pig. A slob. Un-hygienic. Always late, disorganised, his desk is always cluttered. A mess! You hate him. Why? Maybe because he is everything you are not. You are organised, disciplined, punctual, clean, tidy and fairly scrupulous. If we are serious about dealing with this hate, what can we do?

Therapists may well advise the following. List on paper all the words that describe Ron at his worst. Then personalise the content, eg. "I would like to be less punctual, or less of a perfectionist, or whatever. Then take what you have personalised, circle two or three that strike you most, divide it in half and go and do it. Why? Because Ron is wearing half your truth, although we would never admit it. Hatred festers because we never admit these things.

There is something in Ron you really want. It's not about becoming like him, but there may be a need to let go a little, lighten up, become less rigid and uptight.

So much hatred can happen because we see qualities in someone else that we don't approve of. But if we are brutally honest with ourselves, and I mean brutally honest, with all its humiliations, what we realise is that what we hate in the other person is already in us. We just live in denial or refusal of this truth. But if honesty happens, we develop an understanding and compassion for the other person. Why? Because now I appreciate the person I hate is just like me! I am just like them! We so easily reject what we don't like, that which is in ourselves, and of course, in the other person.

'The stone the builders rejected has become the keystone', Jesus says. What we reject in ourselves, and so in another person, with brutal honesty, we see how this becomes our pathway to holiness. Compassion, patience and understanding happen because what we hate in them, we see in us. And we make peace with it.

The very thing we eliminate from the building blocks of our own personalities and our identities, the stone the builders reject, is the very thing, the 'stone', that becomes the keystone, our pathway to holiness – our salvation.

Can we be brutally honest with ourselves?
